

Positive update on Stephen Curry's status as he prepares to face the Wizards!

The Golden State Warriors have kept up their hot season despite Stephen Curry's absence due to an ankle injury. Curry has missed the last three games, all of which the Warriors won. On Saturday, they built a 31-point lead over the Houston Rockets, ultimately winning in overtime with key contributions from Jonathan Kuminga and Brandin Podziemski.

While the team has managed well without Curry, they're eager for his return, and a recent injury report suggests he may be ready for Monday's game against the Washington Wizards.

It's the first such designation for Curry since he returned to the court last week in a win vs the Los Angeles Clippers.

Is the Warriors' hot start legit?

