

700-year-old surprisingly preserved ship discovered in Estonia

A 700-year-old ship, stunningly preserved, has been discovered in Estonia. The ship was reportedly part of the Hanseatic League – a powerful trading network stretching from England to Russia, Daily Mail reported.

The ship, thought to be a 13th-century Hanseatic cog was found amid construction work in the Estonian capital. The wooden ship is reportedly at least 80 ft in size.

© Credit: Ragnar Nurk/Pen News

A 700-year-old ship that was part of the Hanseatic League has been found just five feet beneath the streets of Tallin. The 80ft-long vessel, thought to be a 13th-century Hanseatic cog, was found during construction work in the Estonian capital.

