

Inside an eerie abandoned lighthouse, visited by tourists despite the perilous climb.aa

The deteriorating lighthouse in Russia was deserted by Soviet workers in 1990 but now attracts hordes of tourists despite a treacherous climb to get to the isolated island location

The lighthouse was abandoned by Soviet workers in 1990 (Image: Getty Images/iStockphoto)

A creepy lighthouse that has been left to rot on a remote island has become a tourist destination for those brave enough to make the perilous journey.

Every year, hundreds of tourists climb to the top of a deteriorating nuclear-powered lighthouse, located on a remote rock at the Cape of Aniva, in the far east of Russia.

But the journey there is brutal, with intrepid visitors first having to drive 90 minutes from the nearest settlement to get to the remote location.

Once there they still have a two-hour boat journey ahead of them to reach the isolated lighthouse, the Mirror reports.

