

2 eagle parents took turns getting covered in snow to protect their eggs from the California stormaa

Thousands of people are tuning into a livestream from Friends of Big Bear Valley showing two bald eagles named Jackie and Shadow work to keep their eggs warm.

A video shows two eagle parents taking turns covering their eggs at their nest during a major winter storm in Southern California.

The bald eagle duo — named Jackie and Shadow — have been incubating their eggs formore than 40 days in Big Bear, California, amid some frigid temperatures, NBC Los Angeles reported on Monday.

