

What would happen if a lightning bolt struck an erupting volcanic crater?

That's one of the questions some people would like to know the answer to. Here's one of the answers to the question: lightning bolts would be attracted to the volcano.

Lightning bolts would be attracted to the volcano. This is because of the electrical charge of the volcano. The volcano would be a natural lightning rod.

