Samarkand is a city in Uzbekistan (Central Asia). It is located at the foot of the Alai Mountains, at an altitude of 720 meters. In the southeast, 400 km away, are the famous Pamir mountains.

Samarkand was known to the ancient Greeks as "Marakanda", being famous for the fertile plain "Zarashon", called by the Greeks "Polytimetos". The city was founded by the Persians, and in 329 BC the citadel was conquered by Alexander the Great. Under Muslim rule, the city's development was rapid, especially under the Persian rule of the Samanid dynasty. The Mongols under the leadership of Genghis Khan destroyed the city in 1220. Under the reign of the Mongol Khan Timur Lenk, Samarkand became the capital of his empire. In 1925, the city became the capital of Uzbekistan, the capital was later moved to Tashkent.
