

Every morning, 80 baby orangutans at the International Animal Welfare Centre in Indonesia are carted to 'school' to learn essential survival skills. naa

Every morning at the International Animal Welfare Centre in Indonesia, a heartwarming routine unfolds as 80 baby orangutans are gently carted off to their special 'school.'

This institution is dedicated to teaching these young apes essential survival skills that are necessary for their future in the wild. The orangutans, each with their own playful and curious nature, embark on a daily journey of learning and discovery. Here, they are guided through various activities designed to mimic the environment they will face in their natural habitats.

Through a combination of interactive lessons and hands-on practice, these baby orangutans acquire essential skills such as foraging for food, building nests, and navigating the complex forest

