

Steph Curry Speaks Out on His Future with the Golden State Warriors

Golden State Warriors star Steph Curry has consistently expressed his desire to spend his entire NBA career with the team. While he also remains focused on winning more championships, the possibility of achieving both goals seems increasingly realistic.

Following an MVP-caliber All-NBA season and a gold medal at the 2024 Paris Olympics, it's clear that the 36-year-old Curry can still be the centerpiece of a championship team. However, even the greatest superstars need a championship-caliber supporting cast, something Curry currently lacks.

This situation has raised questions about how much longer Curry will remain patient with the Warriors, as the only NBA franchise he's ever played for is expected to provide him with an established second option.

Golden State Warriors guard Stephen Curry (30) sits on the bench during action against the Sacramento Kings in the fourth quarter during a play-in game of the 2024 NBA playoffs at the Golden 1 Center. / Cary Edmondson-USA TODAY Sports

During a recent appearance on the Today Show, Curry reiterated that his plan is to retire in Golden State.

"I hope so for sure," Curry said. "I've been there, going into my 16th year. I've always said it's a goal of mine to finish my career with that organization... I wanna keep winning, obviously, and I know we have hopefully some days ahead of still doing that."

It will take a major change of direction for Golden State to reenter the elite tier, as their current roster is nowhere close to that tier. In the playoffs last season, Golden State only made marginal moves this summer, trading Klay Thompson and bringing in a few role players to round out their rotation.

Read More