

Dennis Schroder of Warriors Shares Son's Adorable Reaction to Trade

The Golden State Warriors made a pre-emptive move before the trade rumors were loosened on December 15, swinging a deal with the Brooklyn Nets for Dennis Schroder by utilizing the injured De'Anthony Melton and his expiring contract in the trade. Schroder is expected to provide an additional 20 points per game and some defense, especially in defense of the point of attack—something the Warriors have missed since Melton's season-ending injury.

It's not just the Warriors who are happy with this trade. Schroder's son, Dennis Jr., is thrilled about his father joining a new team and playing alongside one of the greatest, Stephen Curry. When his mother told him about the trade, Dennis Jr. asked, "Where are you going?" and upon hearing "Golden State," his immediate response was, "Oh. We're lucky. Now it's a good team at least." Schroder shared this humorous moment in his post-trade conference via 95.7 The Game on X (formerly Twitter). Dennis Jr. is so excited, he watches every game and often asks, "Was Steph Curry there?"—often ignoring his father entirely!
