

“Sell old bike?”

That's a question arising in the mind of every owner of any type of two-wheeler. Selling old two-wheelers carries a wealth of benefits that are increasingly attracting attention. Before we take a deep dive, we present them all to you here, in one place and in brief, to keep you better informed and help you make the best decision.

What many people do not realise before is that selling old two-wheelers helps in maximising your savings, in addition to earning profits, too. Bikes or scooters, after a particular period, result in increasing maintenance costs and if they reach the point of poor performance, then they simply occupy space and gather dust. With time, the price you can get by selling them keeps decreasing the more you delay, until we are left with earning pennies from their scrap value. However, selling them before they reach breaking point frees up unused space, and creates income for you – whether you use it to reduce the price of the next vehicle you purchase or recover a greater part of the cost you purchased this bike for, and benefits the environment by encouraging reduced carbon emissions by urging people to use two-wheelers instead of four-wheelers.

Let's dig deeper to know how and where to get the best price for your bike.

Why Selling Your Old Bike Is A Smart Financial Move:

Unlock Hidden Value:

Every type of two-wheeler has a value, even after repeated uses, that it can be sold for. With expert evaluation, the best price can be achieved at which it is sold. This is the hidden value your bike can give you and create financial gain.

Free Up Space:

Bikes or scooters lying idle in your garage or parking space occupy unnecessary space and gather dust. Selling frees up space and improves utilisation.

Promotes Sustainability:

The community of second-hand automobiles is growing. It is economical and environmentally friendly. Selling old bikes reduces carbon emissions as there is another one on the street using a two-wheeler instead of a four-wheeler.

How To Determine The Value Of Your Old Bike:

Assess Condition:

Assessing the condition before selling your old bike helps set and negotiate a fair price with the dealer or consumer. It can be done by checking the wear & tear of the tyres, checking the air pressure, performing an oil change if needed, cleaning, polishing, maintaining the engine & fuel system, and ensuring that the suspension is in optimal condition. The better the quality, the better the price.

